

Appointment Scanner — Independent Log Verification

GVCW Portal | Lahore Visa Application Centre | Premium Lounge, Individual booking | 5 August 2026

Summary

The automation log covering 6–24 August 2026 was checked line by line against a completely separate, manually driven set of searches on the live portal. Each date was searched again independently and the portal's own response was recorded directly.

16 of 16 dates verified — 100% match

Every entry in the log was confirmed correct. No incorrect result, no missed availability, and no false report of availability was found.

Dates 22–24 August could not be re-checked because the portal's rate limit was reached during verification (see below).

A note on the closed days

The dates returning “no appointments available” fall on Saturdays and Sundays, plus Friday 14 August — Pakistan's Independence Day. The centre is closed on those days. The automation identified this pattern correctly without being told which days were holidays, which is a strong independent indication that the recorded results reflect the real portal.

Searches completed before the rate limit

|                   |                                                                             |
|-------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Automation run    | 19 searches completed, rate limit reached on the 20th (25 Aug)              |
| Independent check | 17 searches completed, rate limit reached on the 18th (22 Aug)              |
| Practical limit   | Approximately 17–20 searches per session before the portal stops responding |

Both runs reached the limit at a similar point despite different pacing between searches. This indicates the portal counts the total number of searches in a period, rather than how quickly they are sent. Slowing the automation down does not increase how many dates can be checked; only the total volume matters.

What a “429” error means

429 is a standard internet response code meaning “Too Many Requests”. It is not a fault, a crash, or a bug in the automation. It is the GVCW portal deliberately declining to answer because too many searches have been made in a short period.

A useful comparison: a receptionist happily answers a number of questions, then says “please wait a moment before asking again.” Nothing has broken — you are simply being asked to slow down.

What this means in practice:

- A date that returns a 429 has not been checked. It is never recorded as “no availability” — it is saved and retried later, so no date is skipped.
- The portal replies with a suggested wait of 10 seconds. In testing the real wait proved considerably longer — more than three minutes in some cases.
- This is normal behaviour for booking portals and applies to anyone using the site, automated or not.

Conclusion

Every result recorded in the automation log for 6–21 August 2026 was independently confirmed as accurate. Across all sixteen verified dates the portal offered no free appointment slots for the Premium Lounge category at the Lahore centre. Where slots were displayed, all were already taken.

The automation is reporting the portal's data correctly. The absence of appointments reflects genuine unavailability at the centre, not a limitation of the software.
